

2013 Criteria for Acceptance and Publication

The evolution of EJREP over its first 10 years (2002-2012), especially as an open access journal, has been positive and encouraging. The Editorial Team wishes to thank both authors and reviewers for their support and dedication.

At this time, we are making certain readjustments, effective as of January 2013, that the Journal may gain well-deserved recognition in terms of impact and internationalization:

1. The article selection process will be yet more rigorous, resulting in a reduced number of articles published per year: approximately 10 articles per issue, or 30 articles per year. This will mean more optimization of the journal's resources in article processing, as well as higher quality in the published articles themselves.
2. All articles submitted and published in Spanish must also be published in English. This will allow all papers to reach a wider international audience and will increase their citations worldwide. Translations to English must reflect proper academic English. For this reason, we recommend that translations be obtained either through our own translation service or another service that is familiar with English-language academic publications in psychology. Final publication will be dependent on a quality version in English.
3. Similarly, all articles submitted in English must make use of proper academic English. Any new manuscripts that are classified with less than "A" quality English writing will be returned to the authors without passing to peer review. Again, EJREP's translation service is one option for improving the quality of English texts, either before or after their initial, internal review.

We hope that these measures contribute towards the ongoing quality improvement of knowledge dissemination in Psychology and Education.
